Reference: My Letter to You of 11 January 2008

Dear Senator Levin:

It has been four months since you received my letter of 11 January 2008. I have telephoned your office twice. On the first call I was informed that response involves a “minimum of 40 days.” That was news to me, and I have been writing to you since moving to Michigan in 1981. On the second telephone call to your office I was placed on hold, etc.

My specific concern involves protecting and upholding of the integrity of the United States Constitution. It is not a trivial or superficial concern. Again, it was in this context, among others, that I wrote to Chief Justice John Roberts on April 2 2007 and asked a simple, polite question:

“Your (Chief Justice Robert’s) use of the phrase ‘constitutional democracy’ is confusing. It is my understanding that the Founding Fathers (and the great women that brought them into the world) intended that the United States of America be founded as a constitutional republic. My simple question follows: Is the United States of America a constitutional democracy or a constitutional republic?”

Second Request that My Simple Question Posed to Chief Justice John Roberts Be Answered

Again, as background only, please read my letter to Senator Byrd. Please then cover my year-old letter of April 2, 2007 to United States Supreme Court Justice John Roberts, requesting that he respond to my simple question regarding the U.S. Constitution (attached).

Sincerely,

Paul V. Sheridan
